Center for Working-Class Studies Legacy Fund

Since its founding in 1995, the Center for Working-Class Studies at Youngstown State University has supported research, teaching, and community outreach related to working-class life and culture. Over the years, the Center has sponsored international conferences and lecture series; developed undergraduate and graduate courses; created an extensive library of online, print, and multimedia materials; and established a digital archive reflecting the rich ethnic and racial history of the Mahoning Valley.

The CWCS Legacy Fund has been established to perpetuate the work of the Center by supporting collaborative projects with the YSU Center for Urban and Regional Studies or the Youngstown Historical Center for Industry and Labor. Projects may include exhibits, research, archive development, lectures, support for academic and organizing projects in Working-Class Studies, and support for projects by community organizations that address economic and social issues in working-class life.

Thank you for supporting the Center for Working-Class Studies Legacy Fund.
